

FOREWORD

In September 1953 Draper High School and Dublin High School were consolidated to form the new Dublin High School in a wonderful new building at Dublin. To us who were members of the student body and faculty, this first year was a challenge. Our challenge was this — First to establish for our school a reputation, one of which our community might be proud and one to which future school students might aspire; to lay a foundation upon which they might build, and to take an appreciable advantage of the many opportunities that our new situation offered.

It is the purpose of this yearbook to depict in spirit and pictures the beautiful new building, of which we are so proud; the student body, and its activities; and to remind the students of the happy hours together during this first year at the new Dublin High School.
